0.1 Data Sources

1. Google Books API
  - Origin: <https://developers.google.com/books/docs/v1/using>
  - Format: JSON

0.2 Data Summary

- Google Books API:
  - Records available: Depends on search query
  - Records retrieved: 10 results per page (variable)
  - Description of records: Book information, including title, author, publisher, and publication date
- OMDb API:
  - Records available: Depends on search query
  - Records retrieved: 10 results per page (variable)
  - Description of records: Movie information, including title, director, actors, and release year
- IMDb (Web scraping for movie descriptions):
  - Records available: Depends on the movie
  - Records retrieved: 1 movie description per movie
  - Description of records: Movie description, scraped from the IMDb webpage
- News API:
  - Records available: Depends on search query
  - Records retrieved: 20 results per page (variable)

- Description of records: News article information, including title, URL, source, and published date

0.3 Data Structure and Implementation

The application uses a combination of classes, dictionaries, lists, and JSON files to organize and store the data fetched from different sources.

0.4 Classes

Book: A class to represent individual books, storing information such as title, author, release year, URL, genres, and average rating.

0.5 Data Structure:

- The data structure used in this code is a genre graph, represented by a dictionary with genres as keys and lists of books as values. The genre graph shows the relationship between genres and the books belonging to each genre.
- The genre graph is created using the `create_genre_graph` function, which takes a list of books as input. The function iterates through the books and their genres, adding each book to the corresponding genre list in the genre graph. Here's the code for creating the genre graph:

[ ]: def create_genre_graph(book_list):
    """
    Create a genre graph from a list of Book objects.

    Args:
        book_list (list): A list of Book objects.

    Returns:
        dict: A dictionary containing genre as the key and a list of books as ↪ the value.
    genre_graph = defaultdict(list)
    for book in book_list:
        for genre in book.genres:
            genre_graph[genre].append(book)
    return genre_graph

0.6 Data Structure and Presentation in results.html

The search results are organized into an accordion-style display, which includes sections for Books, Movies, Articles, Most Common Genres, and Highest Rated Books. This allows users to navigate between different categories of search results with ease.

- Books: This section displays the list of books fetched from the Google Books API, each with a link to their Google Books page.
- Movies: This section displays the list of movies fetched from a movie API, each with their title and a short description.

- Articles: This section displays a list of news articles fetched from a news API, each with a link to the article, the source, and the date of publication.
- Most Common Genres: This section displays the most common genres among the search results, with a list of books belonging to each genre.
- Highest Rated Books: This section displays a list of the highest-rated books in the search results, each with a link to their Google Books page.

0.7 Data Processing

- `search_books()`: A function that searches for books using the Google Books API, processes and filters the results, and returns a list of Book objects and the total number of items.
- `search_movies()`: A function that searches for movies related to a book using the OMDB API and returns a list of movie information.
- `search_articles()`: A function that searches for news articles using the News API and returns a list of article information.
- `create_genre_graph()`: A function that creates a genre graph from a list of Book objects.
- `find_most_common_genres()`: A function that finds the most common genres from a list of Book objects and returns a list of most common genres and a genre graph.
- `find_highest_rated_books()`: A function that finds the highest-rated books from a list of Book objects and returns a sorted list of books.
- `get_movie_description()`: A function that retrieves movie descriptions by web scraping the IMDb webpage using the IMDb ID.

0.8 JSON Files

JSON files are used to cache search results from the Google Books API. The search query and start index are used to name the JSON files, which are stored in a ‘cache’ directory. For example, after searching for “Dragon Ball” here is the ‘Dragon Ball_0.json’ output:

Then we join them as they fight in a life or death battle against the Demon King Pikkoro! Akira Toriyama starts us off by introducing three new characters into the story. These are Tenshinhan, Chaozu, and their evil master, Tsuru-sennin. This book reveals each of their cultural backgrounds. That's right, if you've ever said to yourself, Why does Tenshinhan have a third eye? and, What the heck is Chaozu?! then this is the book you've been waiting for. Toriyama then takes the Dragon Ball story to new depths by adding demons and gods into the mix. And the way Goku does it is straight out of secret Daoist meditation practices of ancient China. Inside these pages you'll discover the true origin of the demon king, find out how Goku learns to sense the energy of his opponents, and understand the full power of the world famous senzu. ## 0.9 Pieces of Data & Data Structures

The accordion-style display is created using the Bootstrap framework. In the results.html file, the accordion structure is created using the following code snippet:

[ ]:
  <!-- Accordion for Books -->

    ...

  <!-- Accordion for Movies -->

    ...

  <!-- Accordion for Articles -->

    ...

  <!-- Accordion for Most Common Genres -->

    ...

  <!-- Accordion for Highest Rated Books -->

    ...

```

Each section of the accordion is contained within a element with the class="card" attribute. Inside each card, there are two child elements, one for the card header and one for the card body. The card header contains a link with the data-toggle="collapse" attribute, which triggers the accordion effect. The card body contains the content to be displayed when the accordion is expanded. For example, here is the code for the "Books" section:

```
[ ]:

            Books

            <ul>
                {% for book in book_list %}
                <li>{{ book.info() }}</
↪a></li>
                {% endfor %}
            </ul>

Here, the "Books" section header is created using a link (< a > element) with the data-toggle="collapse" attribute, and the href attribute points to the ID of the collapsible content (#collapseBooks). The collapsible content is contained within a < div > element with the ID "collapseBooks" and the class="collapse show" attribute. The show class means that this section will be expanded by default when the page is loaded. The content of the "Books" section is dynamically generated using a Jinja2 template for loop.

NOTE: To see the organization and presentation of the different sections, such as Books, Movies, Articles, Most Common Genres, and Highest Rated Books please see the demo video.

0.11 Interaction and Presentation Options

0.12 User-facing Capabilities

Users can search for books, movies, and related articles using a query, apply filters like language, author, genre, and minimum rating, and sort the results. They can view search results, analyze the most common genres, and find the highest-rated books. The application also displays movie descriptions and news articles related to the search query.

0.13 Interactive and Presentation Technologies

- Flask: A web framework used to create the application’s frontend and backend, handling user input and displaying search results.
- Jinja2: A templating engine used in Flask to render the search results dynamically in the results.html file.
- Bootstrap: A CSS framework used to style the application, making it responsive and visually appealing. It also provides functionality for collapsible sections and navigation buttons.
- JavaScript: Used to implement interactive elements such as toggling dark mode functionality.
- Python: Used to handle the backend processing, including searching for books, movies, and related articles, creating the genre graph, and applying filters to the results.

0.14 Instructions for User Interaction

After submitting the search query from the index.html page, the user will be redirected to the search results page (results.html).

1. On the search results page, the user can view the results organized into collapsible sections: Books, Movies, Articles, Most Common Genres, and Highest Rated Books.
2. Users can click on the section headers to expand or collapse the content within each section.
3. Click on the URLs provided to access more information about the items displayed.
4. Users can navigate through the search results using the “Previous” and “Next” buttons at the bottom of the page.
5. To start a new search, users can click the “Start New Search” button, which will redirect them back to the index.html page.
